I think it's time South Australia got back on track to being a world leader in sustainable safe energy production.

The current Labor Govt is too wedded to coal and the mining industry when it is clearly in decline and continually exacerbating the climate crisis the world is facing.

We need to:

- Close coals mines asap.
- Support the workers res-kill in renewables technologies.
- Beautify the mining site remnants and ensure these zones are safe and non-toxic going forward.
- Foster renewable manufacturing and innovation with grants.
- Support small communities fund their own sustainable energy supply with meaningful grants and long term political and policy support.
- Commit to build BIG utility solar thermal power stations .
- Make SA 100% renewable and independent from external energy sources/supplies.
- Build on the existing automative skills we have to develop parts for future electric and driver-less cars; trains; and trams.
- Start planning for the inevitable electric car boom by installing power recharge stations on all our ring roads and popular regional towns.

We could be so fabulous. The public wants it. Industry needs it.
Just do it!

Yours sincerely,
